Inabox Group on track to expand into ICT with the appointment of CTO

Inabox Group Limited (IAB) has appointed former iVox CEO Michael Clarke as Chief Technology Officer.

This appointment is key in the company's strategic move to be positioned as an information communication technology (ICT) company.

"Michael has a big challenge ahead of him helping transition the business into a technology driven business.

"He will be instrumental in driving our next generation product strategy together with our CIO Laura Jacobs and Group Product Manager James Espie," said Inabox Group CEO and managing director, Damian Kay.

The CTO role involves the future development and growth of next generation voice products and cloud services.

Four teams will be reporting to the CTO, including networks, system administration, voice engineering and the new cloud business acquired this week, Neural Networks.

Michael brings with him 20 years experience in operations and management of IT&T organisations with a specialisation in VoIP technology.

His wholesale VoIP company, iVox, was acquired as part of the initial public offering of Inabox Group in 2013.

He was instrumental in Inabox's transition from reseller to originator of VoIP technology.

“The ICT space has huge potential for the Group and I’m looking forward to taking Inabox to the next level,” said newly appointed Inabox CTO, Michael Clarke.

With this new appointment, alongside the cloud computing Neural Networks acquisition, Inabox Group is one step closer to its vision to be recognised as a leading provider of wholesale telecommunications and next generation technology services.
